A doomed shoot?

The cast and crew wondered if their shoot was doomed after a crane dropped a cargo container on top of their bus while it was being shipped to Dubai. To make matters worse, the first day of filming was held up by a real sandstorm!

The script was changed to explain the damaged bus

A tale of two buses

The crew bought two buses – one for the shoot in Dubai and one for the shoot in the UK. They weren't identical so they had to match up the seats, lights and poles. But when the cargo container destroyed one of the buses, they had to do the same damage to the undamaged bus, too, so that they still matched!

Take shelter!

A material called silicon was used for the glass debris. It was poured into sheet form, then broken up into lots of little pieces. A machine blew it into the bus, so it looked just like shattered glass!

Luckily, this isn't real glass!

Back in a studio...

STORM!

Sandstorm!

It was very windy and overcast for the first day of the shoot. The cast and crew had sand in their faces all day, meaning they could hardly do any filming! The weather was better for days two and three though – phew!

The crew had to protect their faces from the sand!

Desert skies

When the bus went through the wormhole, you could see the desert outside the bus window. This was actually filmed in the UK studio, using a device called a translight, which made it look like there was a real desert outside!

Stormy weather!

HEAR NO EVIL

1:45am...

There's a party in full swing at Flat 14B, Jubilee Court...

Script STEVE LYONS
Art JOHN ROSS
Colours ALAN CRADDOCK

... Which is bad news for Mrs Agnes Hardcastle.

Oh, please, please. This is the third time this week. I just want to get some sleep!

Agnes lives in Jubilee Court, too. In Flat 14C.

I did warn them. No one can say I didn't. I told them what I would do if they didn't turn down that noise.

They've only themselves to blame!

Meanwhile, the Doctor is now travelling with his new friend, Heather McCrimmon.

I don't believe this. You've lost the sonic screwdriver?

I know I had it yesterday. I must have dropped it when I bumped into that Siltheen on top of the London Gherkin!

And so...

So, where do we start looking?

Good question, Heather. I reckon we should...

Heather and the Doctor are speaking but there's no sound

The Doctor leads Heather back to the TARDIS

The sonic must be stuck on a cancellation wave setting... broadcasting a bubble of silence. At least now we know where to find it

"It'll be at the centre of that bubble"

8.55am

Agnes Hardcastle enjoys the blissful silence. She sleeps, at last, thankful for the wonderful new toy that has brought her such peace

But then, Agnes never gave much thought to what 'silence' really means

She has no idea of the horrors it can conceal.

Outside

Oh no, that kid can't hear the truck coming up behind him! Or the people trying to warn him!

This is mad! I can't believe that something as simple as silence has caused all this chaos!

And now... now, I've lost sight of the Doctor.

"Where did he go?"

It's no use shouting, no one will hear me. Only one thing to do...

I can't... can't stand the pain much longer... Got to get a message out somehow.

But how?

The psychic paper!

That... that horrible thing, whatever it is, it's fading away!

Doctor! What was that creature? What did it do to you?

It's OK, Heather. I'm all right. The creature wasn't trying to hurt me, it was just trying to communicate with me.

Unfortunately, its method of communication is deadly to us, just as ours is deadly to it.

Normally, the sounds of our world - even the slightest breath of the wind - would have kept the creature at bay, in its own dimension.

Until this person invited it right in. I think we'd better take our property back now, don't you?

2:15am. Agnes Hardcastle can't sleep again. But, this time, it's for a different reason.

Agnes can't sleep tonight because it's too quiet by far. And she is afraid of the silence now.

Which is bad news for the people in Flat 14B.

NEXT WEEK!

There's trouble for the Doctor and Heather at her university ball! Don't miss next Saturday's Daily Mirror for another exclusive Doctor Who Adventures magazine!
